

Vision for ISCA

Two years have passed since the elective General Assembly in Paris, ISCA has strengthened its identity with enthusiasm and legibility, and developed its activities. Today, ISCA positioned on the borders of education and sport must find the right balance and should take advantage of this dual focus to develop its actions and reaffirm its commitment to civic , humanistic and educational values inseparable from sport and cultural actions. Education for citizenship and the practice of community life are vectors of democracy. This gives meaning to our militant commitment for youth service .Our actions are the result of educational choices. That shows our ability to remain a recognized leader as global actor in the world of education and sport. Innovation is not the only educational solution. It is necessary but not sufficient. Promote new practices gives us a new openness but does not exempt us to continue to deep our work in more traditional registries. Relationships with institutions such as the European Union take on importance. They are not confined to negotiate each year the amount of grants, while recognizing they abound our products and are essential to fund our projects. The regularity and the quality of the topics of our meetings remains a preferent share in order to constantly maintain successful relationships.

In a context of financial uncertainty, ISCA continues to develop its cooperation with private partners moving in the world of education and sport. “Move week” is a good example of a successful partnership (ISCA, EU and private partners), which shows that we can manage a realistic policy respecting our values.

For ISCA, it is also the strong ties and links that we will strengthen among all our members that will determine the success of good governance. Communication remains an indispensable information sharing lever.

I submitted a few thoughts on some areas which seems to me fundamental. They are part of a larger project developed over several years by ISCA.

If you give me your confidence, I will participate with strength and vigor in the next ISCA Executive Committee for supporting and developing ISCA program.
