MOTION FOR A EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT RESOLUTION

on EU sports policy: assessment and possible ways forward (2021/2058(INI))

The European Parliament,

- having regard to Articles 6 and 165 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU), which specify the competences and actions of the Union in the area of sport, in particular the promotion of European sporting issues, while taking account of the specific nature of sport, its structures based on voluntary activity and its social and educational function,
- having regard to the United Nations 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development and its 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), and in particular the role of sport as an important enabler of sustainable development and the contributions it makes to peace, to the promotion of tolerance and respect, and to the empowerment of women and of young people, individuals and communities, as well as to health, education and social inclusion objectives¹,
- having regard to Regulation (EU) 2021/817 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 20 May 2021 establishing Erasmus+: the Union Programme for education and training, youth and sport and repealing Regulation (EU) No 1288/2013², and in particular to the sport chapter thereof,

- F. whereas COVID-19 has had an adverse economic and social impact on the sport sector;
- G. whereas the EU should aim to further develop the European dimension of sport while respecting its specific nature and autonomy;
- H. whereas EU sports policy must support both elite and grassroots sports, including forms of active leisure;
- I. whereas grassroots sport contributes to the development of skills among young people and promotes civic participation through volunteering;
- J. whereas young athletes face the challenge of reconciling their sports careers, their training and professional activities;
- K. whereas sport has a positive impact on citizens' health and wellbeing;
- L. whereas the development of sports infrastructure is an important element in improving quality of life and economic opportunities in remote and disadvantaged areas;
- M. whereas sport faces a range of challenges such as governance issues, corruption, match-fixing, doping, financing, digital piracy, purely profit-based models, human rights violations, discrimination and violence, and environmental impacts and sustainability concerns;
- N. whereas women still are underrepresented in sport, both in governing bodies and in the media sphere;
- O. whereas illegal streaming of live sports events threatens the financial stability of both professional and grassroots sports, which depend on the revenues from sport broadcasting rights;

Strengthening visibility, cooperation and the mainstreaming of sport in EU policies

1. Calls on the EU to adopt a more holistic approach to sports policy and step up efforts to mainstream it into other EU policies;
2. Stresses the need to strengthen interinstitutional cooperation and collaboration with sports stakeholders;
3. Calls on the Commission to set up regular high-level structured cooperation with all sports stakeholders and other institutions to deliver more targeted and accountable recommendations for action on the current challenges facing the sport sector;
4. Calls on the Commission to present a communication on the future of sport linked to the EU's strategic goals;
5. Calls on the Commission to strengthen the visibility of sport and its perspective on sport across policy areas at EU level by adding sport to the title of the portfolio of the Commissioner in charge;
6. Calls also in this regard for the establishment of an EU sport coordinator who would be the Commission's contact on the issue and a visible reference point;

7. Insists on the increased involvement of Parliament in order to provide a framework for regular political debate and action on sport, and on parliamentary scrutiny and monitoring with regard to the implementation of the strategic goals;
8. Underlines the role of the Conference on the Future of Europe in discussions on the way forward on EU sports policy and sport related issues, and encourages the active participation of all sports stakeholders;
9. Acknowledges the recent adoption of the revised European Sports Charter within the Council of Europe which highlights the common features of a framework for European sport and its organisation and invites EU institutions to strive for consistency, cooperation and solidarity at continental level, while taking initiative in the field of sports policy;
10. Calls for Parliament to play a more active role in sports diplomacy;

Enhancing the principles of a European sports model

11. Acknowledges the importance of a European sports model based on values, voluntary activities and solidarity and looks forward to further developing it in the interests of citizens and stakeholders;
12. Acknowledges the diversity of approaches across sports and countries while considering that the common foundation of European sport needs to be further enhanced and protected, in particular the links between grassroots and elite sport;
13. Calls for a European sports model that recognises the need for a strong commitment to integrating the principles of solidarity, sustainability, inclusiveness for all, open competition, sporting merit and fairness, and accordingly strongly opposes breakaway competitions that undermine such principles and endanger the stability of the overall sports ecosystem; stresses that these principles should be encouraged by all sports stakeholders and national authorities;
14. Recognises the role of federations in governing their sport and encourages closer coordination and cooperation with authorities and all relevant stakeholders;
15. Acknowledges sports clubs as the foundation of a European sports model offering everyone the opportunity to engage in sport locally, especially young people, regardless of their cultural or socioeconomic background;
16. Highlights the need for more targeted and increased solidarity and more financial redistribution, as well as exchanges in skills and know-how, especially between professional and grassroots sport; calls on sports federations to implement a solidarity mechanism based on a fair and binding distribution method that ensures the adequate funding of amateur and grassroots sport;
17. Emphasises the need to ensure the sustainable financial stability and sound management of sports clubs and calls on sporting bodies to introduce mechanisms to this end, where they do not already exist, alongside a proper enforcement system;

18. Believes that the German club ownership model based on the 50+1 rule has served German football well and should be considered as a possible example of best practice as other countries seek to enhance their own models;
19. Urges public authorities, sports federations and organisations to uphold human rights and democratic principles in all of their actions, especially when awarding host status for major sporting events, as well as in the choice of sponsors; insists that major sporting events should no longer be awarded to countries where these fundamental rights and values are repeatedly violated;
20. Calls on sports organisations to respect the established frequency of international sports tournaments, especially European and world championships, while taking into account domestic competitions and the health of athletes and players;

Renewing good governance and integrity

21. Considers that a renewed commitment to good governance is needed in order to rebalance the social and economic elements in sport and to ensure that stakeholder representation in decision-making bodies is respected;
22. Notes that a focus on commercial interests by professional sport should be balanced with much-needed social functions; encourages the relevant organisations to address this issue as a means of maintaining their position as role models in defending the ideals on which European sport was built;
23. Calls on international, European and national sports organisations and stakeholder representative organisations to implement the highest governance standards;
24. Acknowledges the efforts made by sports organisations and federations to ensure the implementation of good governance principles in sport and stresses the need for the Commission to develop recommendations for guidelines for the organisation of sport and its governing bodies in the EU;
25. Urges the international, European and national sports governing bodies and stakeholders to implement measures on diversity and inclusion, in particular to address the low numbers of women and ethnic minorities in leadership positions and on boards;
26. Calls on all sports stakeholder organisations to attain the appropriate levels of representativeness and professionalisation as a prerequisite for involvement in collective decision-making processes;
27. Calls for the EU institutions to promote and protect the fundamental rights of athletes, including athlete representation in decision-making, freedom of association, collective bargaining and non-discrimination;
28. Stresses the need for sports authorities to take into account the protection of athletes' mental health in the same way as their physical health;

29. Calls on the Member States to take measures to ensure that all professional athletes have equal access to social and labour protection mechanisms;
30. Calls on the Member States, sports governing bodies and clubs to acknowledge the status of fans in sport by involving them in governance and decision-making bodies;
31. Calls on the Commission to build on its existing work on social dialogue and to extend its scope to all professional sports;
32. Welcomes reforms and measures to improve transparency and accountability in the player transfer market across sports and urges further efforts; notes that European frameworks are needed to improve player transfer systems to meet European standards and objectives, in particular with regard to labour market and financial regulations;
33. Recalls the need to regulate the activities of agents and acknowledges that the recent reforms in the football transfer market, including the establishment of a clearing house, licencing requirements for agents and caps on agents' commission go in the right direction; urges the relevant sports authorities to ensure the prompt implementation of these reforms and calls on the Commission to monitor progress;
34. Insists that fighting corruption in sport, which is often linked to money laundering and crime, requires transnational cooperation among all stakeholders and authorities;
35. Calls on Member States and the relevant authorities to firmly fight against abuses in the gambling sector, including the proliferation of fraudulent sites and predatory practices, in order to protect minors and vulnerable people from any risk;
36. Urges the Council and the Commission to break the deadlock on the signing and ratification of the Council of Europe Convention on the manipulation of sports competitions;
37. Highlights the need for capacity building to strengthen prevention and anti-doping measures in sport through a common European strategy that includes close collaboration and information sharing between law enforcement agencies in all EU countries;
38. Highlights the need for information and educational campaigns on the prevention of doping, match-fixing, corruption, violence, physical and psychological abuse and other integrity-related matters with a focus on amateur sport;

Ensuring safe, inclusive and equal sport

39. Calls on the Commission and the Member States to involve all relevant stakeholders in ensuring that sports policy and legislation support gender equality, with particular attention to tackling all forms of violence and harassment, gender stereotypes, low visibility and media coverage, and disparities in wages, premium pay and awards;
40. Calls on national sports federations to move towards equalising premium payments for female and male athletes, following the example of the Football Association of Ireland (FAI);

41. Calls on the Commission to recognise the importance and support the social inclusion of persons with fewer opportunities, refugees, ethnic minorities and the LGBTQI+ community in sport, leaving no one behind;
42. Underlines the need to leverage the significant social weight of elite sport to raise awareness related to issues faced by LGBTQI+ people in sport;43. Urges sports bodies and public authorities to effectively tackle discrimination, violence and hate speech and to guarantee safe, inclusive sport for all athletes, spectators and staff in sports venues and online;
44. Insists on a zero-tolerance approach in terms of racism and violence in sport and urges the Commission, the Member States and sports federations to develop measures to prevent such incidents and to adopt effective penalties and measures to support victims;
45. Calls on the Member States to step up efforts towards the inclusion in sports activities and programmes of persons with mental and physical disabilities, and to increase visibility in the media of competitions involving athletes with disabilities;
46. Stresses the need to increase funding and remove all barriers for people with disabilities through educational and awareness campaigns, specialised training for relevant actors and accessible sports infrastructure that allows attendance at sports events and participation in sports;
47. Calls on the Member States to offer equal financial rewards to their Olympic and Paralympic champions and to support Olympians and Paralympians with low incomes;
48. Recalls that the EU faces demographic challenges such as an ageing population, and that specific attention should be paid to encouraging active ageing through physical activity;
49. Urges the media in the Member States to give more coverage to a wider range of sports and in particular women's and youth sports;
50. Calls on the Member States to introduce special measures to enable children from socially disadvantaged backgrounds to access sports that involve high equipment costs and fees, including winter sports;
51. Calls for the EU institutions, the Member States and sports organisations to prioritise policies that safeguard children from discrimination, harassment and any form of abuse, raise awareness and provide access to remedies, including legal advice and timely protection;
52. Welcomes the 2019 Commission study entitled 'Safeguarding children in sport' and calls on the Commission to continue working in this area, including by regularly collecting and updating data;
53. Insists that young athletes from developing countries must be protected from fraud and trafficking, and should benefit from a legal status in Europe and receive support with the assessment and monitoring of their contracts;

54. Calls on the Member States and sports federations to provide first aid training for young people and athletes;

Promoting healthy and active lifestyles together with education and development opportunities

55. Urges the Member States and public authorities to develop sports infrastructure, especially in remote regions and disadvantaged areas, and to increase the amount of physical education, including daily physical activities, active breaks and extracurricular physical activities in schools, while instigating a change of mentality in the recognition of the importance of sport as a school discipline;
56. Stresses the need for an integrated approach to active cities which promotes physical activity in the everyday life of European citizens, including at the workplace, and which increases and develops active and sustainable mobility and means of transportation;
57. Welcomes initiatives and campaigns to encourage physical activity such as the European Week of Sport, #BeActive and HealthyLifestyle4All and encourages the Commission to intensify communication about these events in the Member States, particularly targeted towards schools; underlines the importance of regular assessments of their outreach and impact;
58. Calls for the EU guidelines on dual careers of athletes to be implemented and promoted in each Member State, and extended to all sport staff engaged in structured sport and for specific retraining initiatives;
59. Reiterates its call on the Commission, the Member States, sports federations and clubs to promote dual-career opportunities for athletes and calls on the Commission to consider including cross-border mobility of athletes in the next Erasmus+ programme;
60. Reiterates the need to develop a strategy for supporting former athletes to ensure they have adequate access to jobs, skilling or reskilling;
61. Highlights the role of coaches, sport staff, teachers and youth workers in developing the skills of and in educating children and young people and stresses that adequate training plays a key role in encouraging participation in sport and in ensuring a safe environment for all;
62. Welcomes the inclusion of sport staff mobility in the Erasmus + 2021-2027 programme, and calls on the Commission, national agencies and sports federations to raise awareness about this new opportunity;
63. Calls on the Commission and the Member States to develop common standards at EU level to ensure that all coaches have the appropriate skills and training to coach children and young people;
64. Calls on the Commission to establish a network of ambassadors for sport to leverage the influence of respected sports role models to encourage physical activity and healthy lifestyles;

65. Recognises the valuable contributions that sports volunteers bring to a society and calls on the Commission and the Member States to create a system in line with the EU skills agenda, and building on the European credit transfer and accumulation system (ECTS) and the European credit system for vocational education and training (ECVET), for the recognition of qualifications gained by volunteers, including coaches working as volunteers;

Helping sport to ensure a successful recovery

66. Insists on the need for support and dedicated funding mechanisms to get the sport sector and all sports back on track in the wake of COVID-19, including through national support funds, the Recovery and Resilience Facility and EU structural funds;
67. Welcomes the fact that some Member States have included sports in their national recovery and resilience plans;
68. Calls on the Commission to provide data on sports-related investments and reforms in its review report on the implementation of the Recovery and Resilience Facility, which is to be presented to Parliament and the Council in 2022;
69. Welcomes the higher budget for sport under the current Erasmus+ programme and supports further synergies between funds and programmes such as EU4Health and LIFE; underlines that the removal of all obstacles in the application process at national level is key in order to make better use of these tools to support the recovery in sport;
70. Regrets the absence of an explicit reference to sport in the EU4Health programme regulation;
71. Urges the EU institutions to considerably increase the budget dedicated to grassroots sport under the Erasmus+ programme in the next financial programming period;
72. Stresses the need to further increase funding for sport, also beyond the Erasmus+ programme, in a targeted manner with a focus on the social dimension of sport, particularly in grassroots sports;
73. Highlights the importance of preparatory actions and pilot projects in the field of sport which provide additional funding for grassroots sport and give promising results;
74. Calls on the Commission to increase the number of accepted pilot projects and preparatory actions in the field of sport;
75. Highlights the need to support sports tourism as one of the means to boost the recovery and resilience of the sport sector after COVID-19;
76. Recalls the importance of protecting traditional sports and promoting them with adequate funding as part of European cultural heritage and regional identity;
77. Calls on national, regional and local authorities to recognise the key role of sport and physical activity in fields such as urban regeneration, tourism and territorial cohesion and to encourage relevant investments under EU cohesion policy, specifically with regard to the European Social Fund Plus, the European Regional and Development Fund and the Recovery and Resilience Facility;

78. Calls on the Commission to encourage the use of REACT-EU funding for projects related to sports infrastructure, provided that it is sustainable, contributes to long-term economic recovery and supports tourism;
79. Draws the attention of the Commission and the managing authorities to the important role of small sports clubs and associations and highlights the lack of human and material resources available to them for accessing European funding and targeted support;
80. Calls on the Member States to consider applying the lowest possible rate of VAT to the sports sector as one of the tools to facilitate access to its services in the wake of COVID-19;
81. Calls on the Commission to develop a methodology for defining the criteria for measuring and monitoring the social impact of sports-related projects together with all relevant stakeholders including civil society, social partners and public authorities, and to regularly update and present data on the social impact of sport;
82. Urges the Commission and the Member States to regularly update and present data on the economic impact of sport;

Supporting the transition to a sustainable and innovative future

83. Notes the efforts undertaken by clubs and federations to ensure environmental sustainability; calls on the EU institutions, Member States and sports federations, however, to further support and promote the development of sport and the organisation of environmentally ambitious sporting events;
84. Insists on the alignment of sport with the principles of the European Green Deal and its contribution to environmental education and behaviour change;
85. Calls on the Commission and the Member States to support the green transition of the sport sector, especially with regards to constructing, extending and renovating sports infrastructure, including winter sports facilities;
86. Highlights the importance of sport and physical activity within the New European Bauhaus and acknowledges the potential for the development of active spaces and the promotion of sustainable sports infrastructure; calls on the Commission to ensure that sports-related projects, especially those within public spaces, are prioritised within this initiative;
87. Calls on the Commission and the Member States to establish harmonised minimum accessibility criteria, sustainability benchmarks and safety standards for sports infrastructure, including measures to prevent any form of harassment, and to support inclusion as well as mobility of athletes and sports-related workers;

88. Calls for particular attention to be paid to the working conditions of construction workers involved in building sports infrastructure;
89. Highlights the importance of innovation and cross-sectoral cooperation in sport, especially of developing digital tools to increase participation in physical activity, with a particular focus on young people;
90. Underlines that in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic, new ways of organising sporting events should be envisaged using the digital technologies available;
91. Calls on the Commission and the European Institute for Technology to create a Knowledge and Innovation Community (KIC) in the field of sport to boost innovation, resilience and transnational collaboration;
92. Calls for the EU institutions to launch a debate on the future and on the opportunities of e-sports and to collect data in order to assess this sector and present a study on its social and economic impact;
93. Calls on the Commission to effectively tackle the growing problem of illegal streaming of live sport events without delay;

94. Instructs its President to forward this resolution to the Council, the Commission, the governments and parliaments of the Member States and European, international and national sports federations and organisations.

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT

Sport has a unique power to promote positive change and transmit values across borders and to inspire and unite people regardless of age, sex, ethnic origin, religion, background or socio-economic status. The educational, cultural and social dimension of sport goes beyond borders and reaches out to all corners of the world.

Furthermore, sport is also an increasingly important economic phenomenon, which makes a major contribution to the strategic objectives of solidarity and prosperity in the EU. Sport generates an added value of EUR 279.7 billion or 2.12% of the Union's GDP and provides jobs for almost six million people¹.

Although the EU only has a competence to support and coordinate sporting activities, the implementation of EU sport policy has contributed to a fundamental evolution of the European dimension in sport, which has produced tangible successful outcomes.

As more than 10 years have passed since the Lisbon Treaty mandate to act in the field of sport, it is necessary to reflect on the future of EU sport policy and possible ways forward. The Rapporteur considers that the EU institutions need to take even more of a lead to support the sport sector for the next decade. This includes a new perspective on governance, strengthening the European dimension of sport, and preparing sport for long-term challenges such as post-pandemic recovery, innovation and environmental impact.

For all of the above reasons, this report seeks to put forward concrete proposals and recommendations for the European sport sector. The Rapporteur presents possible actions across seven thematic strands detailed below.

First, both increased cooperation between institutions on the one hand, and an enhanced dialogue with the sports stakeholders on the other, are crucial to guide our decision-making in the field of sport. In this regard, the Rapporteur proposes to establish regular, structured and high-level cooperation led by the European Commission to develop more accountable recommendations in the field of EU sport policy. This should be accompanied by a new Communication on the Future of Sport for the next decade, outlining strategic objectives and orientations.

The European Parliament also has a key role to play in providing a framework for regular debate, communication and decision-making. Moreover, EU policy on sport requires further mainstreaming and coordination. It is important that sport can benefit from actions related to EU policies on health, employment, youth, education, internal market or environment, to name just a few.

The Rapporteur believes that more visibility could be given to sport by the inclusion of a reference to sport in the title of the relevant Commissioner, which would send a clear signal that sport is high on the agenda of the EU. In addition, the nomination of an "EU Sport

¹ Study - Mittag, J. & Naul, R. (2021), EU sports policy: assessment and possible ways forward, European Parliament, Research for CULT Committee – Policy Department for Structural and Cohesion Policies. Brussels.

Coordinator” charged with the role of enhancing cross-sectoral cooperation, as well as knowledge development and exchange on sport issues within the European Commission services should be envisaged.

Second, the Rapporteur focuses on enhancing a values based sport model in Europe for the next generation. This is grounded in the specific nature of sport and based on its fundamental social, educational and cultural values. Discussions are ongoing in multiple fora, including the Council of the EU, the European Commission and the Council of Europe. Yet, despite much political will and support, substantive progress on a model of sport has been lacking in the last decade. In particular, the debate has been stymied by semantics about the name, rather than focusing on the substance of the relevant features of the model, what they mean and how best to promote them. Whilst this confusion and inaction persists, the forces that threaten the European dimension in sport and seek to undermine its features only stand to benefit. The European Super League was a prime example of this, which for now, has fortunately failed due to the strong European opposition to it.

Furthermore, there must be a willingness among all institutions and stakeholders to recognise and protect what makes European sport so entertaining, popular, and successful while maintaining its social and societal functions. These features include sporting merit, open competition, competitive balance and solidarity. The Rapporteur believes more commitment is needed to strengthen sport through an increased distribution of revenue. More equitable redistribution, in addition to public funding, supports development at the grassroots level. This should involve education and social programmes for players, coaches, and sport staff, as well as equipment and infrastructure that can serve communities and society at large. This financial solidarity also allows less profitable competitions (e.g. youth competitions) to continue taking place. There is also a need to improve the financial distribution and the long-term financial sustainability of professional sport with the objective of reducing the financial and competitive gap between clubs.

The Rapporteur reiterates that the EU institutions and the European Parliament in particular have a key role to play in promoting democracy, freedom, rule of law and respect for human rights through sport diplomacy and should be more active in this regard, including when it comes to EU external relations. These values should also be taken into account by public authorities, sport federations and organisations when awarding host status for major sport events.

Third, there is a need for a new appreciation of good governance combining traditional commitments to integrity with progressive actions on gender equality and inclusiveness to achieve better representation of stakeholders in decision-making bodies. In this regard, concrete measures towards organisational diversity and inclusion should be put in place. The Rapporteur acknowledges the central role of the federations in governing their sport while encouraging closer coordination with all authorities and relevant stakeholders, such as leagues, clubs, athletes, fans and volunteers. These increased efforts are needed to ensure democracy, transparency and accountability.

Athletes are at the centre of sport. They deserve the same respect and protection of their rights as other European workers, including freedom of speech and association, health and safety, non-discrimination, and access to dual-career opportunities. The recent crisis has shown that even though sport events can run without spectators, fan culture is an indispensable part of the sport experience. In this regard, it is important to acknowledge the status of fan organisations in sport by involving them in governance.

Sport faces serious ethical challenges and threats to its integrity such as match-fixing and doping which must be tackled. In this context, the Rapporteur calls for an urgent solution allowing the EU to sign and ratify the Council of Europe Convention on the manipulation of sport competitions. Doping is a serious threat to youth and society which is not just a problem affecting elite athletes but also amateurs. In recent years, there has been an increase in the trafficking and use of steroids and other prohibited substances that are easily available. Supporting education and prevention programmes is one way to tackle integrity-related matters, but transnational and systematic cooperation among all stakeholders, including public authorities and institutions, law enforcement agencies, private companies, athletes and supporters is also required. The World Anti-Doping Agency (WADA) and United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) have been working in this direction.

The Rapporteur also welcomes all positive evolutions in transparency and accountability in the player transfer market and new regulations on agents in football which could be further extended.

Fourth, sport at its best can bring people together and serve as a vector for integration, especially for people with fewer opportunities. For this to happen, it should be safe, inclusive and accessible to all. The Rapporteur recognises the importance of the social inclusion of all marginalised communities including refugees. Sport promotes the active contribution of European citizens to society and helps foster a sense of belonging.

Unfortunately, where the scourge of discrimination, harassment, violence and hate speech remain serious issues which should be actively tackled by public authorities and sport organisations not only in sport venues, but also online. Another problem impacting sport is the psychological, physical and sexual abuse of minors. Special attention should be paid to young athletes originating from developing countries who are extremely vulnerable because they have left their families and countries at a young age. They should receive support services and legal help from sport organisations.

The Rapporteur calls for support for sport activities and competitions for people with mental and physical disabilities, notably by giving them equal access to sport and by ensuring funding and media coverage of sport events involving disabled athletes. The practice of sport is also crucial to encourage active ageing through physical activity. With regard to women's sport, despite significant achievements, there is still an ongoing gender 'play' gap in the practice of sport as well as persistent gender balance and equality issues in the administration of sport. All institutions, sport federations and organisations must redouble their efforts in promoting women's sport and women in sport. In this regard, the Rapporteur is looking forward to the upcoming recommendations of the EU High Level Group on Gender Equality in Sport.

Fifth, in view of increasing issues related to obesity and inactivity, particularly among young people, the Rapporteur suggests stepping up the quantity of physical activity and extracurricular physical activities in schools. Young people in Europe spend approximately 12-13 years in the school system, and it should be a major objective that they acquire healthy lifestyle habits during this period. Further investment is also needed in school sport facilities to ensure safe use and conditions for the practice of sport.

Initiatives and campaigns encouraging physical activity, such as the European Week of Sport, #BeActive, HealthyLifestyle4All and LifeLong Physical Activity are welcomed and should be further promoted. With the success of such initiatives in mind, the Rapporteur proposes to establish a network of Ambassadors for Sport which would involve respected sport role models who are influential among EU citizens.

Lifelong learning in sport is important, not only for athletes who after finishing their career will follow other paths, but for sport staff as well. This is why the EU guidelines on dual careers of athletes should be extended to all sport staff along with targeted retraining initiatives.

It is also important to recall that volunteers enable the smooth running of many sporting events and in doing so they build up a great deal of skill and experience. The Rapporteur would like to underline the importance of their contribution and believes that their skills and experience should be formally recognised.

Sixth, the Rapporteur stresses that it is vital to deliver a strong and inclusive recovery for sport and society in the wake of Covid-19. Last year was extremely challenging for the sport sector as it was one of the hardest hit by the pandemic. The economic impact on professional and grassroots sport has been enormous, with revenues plummeting due to numerous events having been cancelled or held without spectators. Many sport clubs, in particular at grassroots level, have experienced an existential threat as they work mostly on a voluntary basis, and therefore operate without any financial reserves. In this regard, the Rapporteur is proposing concrete support mechanisms to get the sport sector back on track. In particular, sport should figure more prominently in cohesion policy programmes and benefit from an increased share of funding not only from cohesion policy but also from the new Recovery and Resilience Facility.

At the same time, it should be highlighted that the Erasmus+ programme for 2021-2027 has received a much higher budget with 1.9 % going to sport, which will allow it to finance more projects. While this is a step forward, the Rapporteur thinks that given the social and economic importance of sport, any future review of the programme should treat sport on an equal budgetary footing with other priorities, such as youth and culture. Additional funding for sport through preparatory and pilot projects is of paramount importance. Therefore, there is a need to increase the number of preparatory actions and pilot projects in the field of sport as they can lead to successful results like the exchange and mobility of coaches and sport staff which is now part of the new edition of the Erasmus + programme.

Measuring the social impact of such initiatives in a more reliable and consistent way would provide vital data for the selection of EU funded sport projects. The Rapporteur therefore proposes to establish a common methodology to better measure social impact. Additionally, there is a need to regularly update and present data on the economic impact of sport with a view to ensuring reliable data for the development of evidence-based policy in the field of sport.

Seventh, the Rapporteur believes that sport should support the transition to a sustainable and innovative future. In this regard, sport organisations have a responsibility to advance a green agenda in sport by aligning their policies with EU climate and environmental action objectives, including the European Green Deal. Moreover, sport is not only an economic sector that has to address its own carbon footprint, but it is also a uniquely powerful force for contributing to environmental education and behaviour change. This is particularly true as regards the organisation of sport events and sport tourism.

Today, modern technologies play a crucial role along the entire sport life cycle, from the recruitment and training of athletes to the analysis of their performance, from audience experience to media and management, from increasing citizens' participation in sport and physical activity to protecting sport integrity, and in tackling match-fixing and doping. For the above reasons, investment in innovation and technology should be seen as a key priority for the long-term sustainability of the sport sector. The Rapporteur recommends creating a Knowledge and Innovation Community (KIC) in the field of sport in order to boost innovation and resilience. Furthermore, in view of the growing interest, especially in younger generations, the Rapporteur believes it is necessary to conduct a study on the social and economic impact of e-sport.

To conclude, the Rapporteur believes that there has been great progress and many positive developments in the field of European sport policy. Numerous recommendations from the previous two European Parliament reports from 2012 and 2017 have been implemented with successful examples including the creation of the European Week of Sport, the mobility of coaches and sport staff and positive developments in terms of governance and the player transfer system reform.

However, it is vital to give more prominence to sport at every level and to make improvements through the concrete proposals and further actions outlined in this report. The EU is not only an economic market but it represents values which also apply to sport, such as democracy, human rights, equality, diversity and solidarity. Challenges to these values abound and there is a need to stand up even more boldly and collectively for them in the future. The proposals that have been made by the Rapporteur recognise the role of the European dimension in sport which should serve as a vehicle for these fundamental principles and deliver added value through social, educational and economic benefits for all citizens. The ball is in our court now, let us all step up to the plate.
